

revocation

[rev-uh-key-shuh n]

noun

1. the act of revoking; annulment.
2. Law. nullification or withdrawal

In the context of the Telephone Consumer Protection Act (TCPA), the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) and the Florida Consumer Collection Practices Act (FCCPA), a consumer can revoke consent to be called. Revoking consent is easy. To revoke consent to be called, you can:

1. Ask them to stop calling you
2. Ask to be removed for their list
3. If a SPAM text, text stop to the number that sent you the text
4. Write the company calling you or sending you texts, and ask them to stop.

Regardless of which method you choose to revoke consent, take good notes. Note the date, time and phone number you called to revoke consent. Or, if you revoked consent on an incoming call, note the date, time and number that called you. Additionally, politely request the name of the person and/or company you are talking to and note that as well. A LeavenLaw Communications Log (also available on the www.TheyCantCall.com website) can assist you in gathering this information. Call today to learn more!
